DUBLIN PROTESTANT ASSOCIATION

ESTABLISHED A.D. 1841.

4, LOWER ABBEY-STREET.

"An Institution worthy of the support of all who value Protestant principle, and who are anxious for the preservation of the rights and liberties of all denominations of our countrymen."

CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE AND TREASURER:
THOMAS H. THOMPSON, Esq.

HONORARY SECRETARIES:
REV. S. G. POTTER, AND JOHN MARTIN, ESQ., T.C.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY:
MR. CHARLES LUSK O'BRIEN.

(Letters Testimonial from the City Representatives.)

"Viewing the Dublin Protestant Association as the organ and nucleus of Protestant feeling and principles, not merely in the City of Dublin, but throughout Ireland generally, I have always felt proud of my connection (as President) with it.

"EDWARD GROGAN, Esq., M.P."

[MORE RECENTLY.]

"Having had for many years an opportunity of observing the working of the Dublin Protestant Association, I have much pleasure in bearing my testimony to the soundness of its principles, and to the efforts made by its leading members for the advancement of Protestant truth. The Association has rendered considerable service to the Protestant Candidates in the Elections for the City, by the spirit which it has contributed to foster among the Protestant Electors; and I feel it my duty, therefore, to recommend it to the sympathy and support of all the friends of Protestantism, not only in Dublin, but throughout Ireland. The pecuniary assistance of its friends is necessary to maintain the Association in full working order and efficiency. Without this assistance the Association must languish, its usefulness be impaired, and the great cause of Conservative Protestantism throughout the country, but especially in Dublin, be damaged.

"EDWARD GROGAN.

"Carlton Club, London, 20th July, 1859."

"I have great pleasure in bearing my testimony to the great utility of the Dublin Protestant Association in keeping alive the Conservative and Protestant spirit in our city, and awakening public attention to the daily encroachments which are attempted on our rights and privileges.

"I have derived very valuable assistance from them in every contest in which I have been engaged for the representation of the city. I therefore consider they well entitled to the generous support of the Protestant community, and to a liberal contribution to their funds from all those who feel an interest in the great cause which has called this Society into existence, and which it has already done so much to promote.

"JOHN VANCE.

"5, Upper Hyde Park-street (3rd July, 1859."

Collecting cards for persons wishing to promote the movement will be supplied, on application at the Committee Rooms of the Association.

All remittances (Post Office Orders and Letters of Credit) are to be made payable to the Treasurer, "Thomas H. Thompson."

TO BE SOLD, before the Hon. Justice Hargreave, in his Court, Inns-quay, in the city of Dublin, on Friday, the 15th day of June, 1860, at the hour of Twelve o'clock, in one Lot, the House, Land, and Premises of Barn-hill, situate in the barony of Rathdown and county of Dublin, containing 54a. 0r. 11p. statute measure, of excellent arable Land, held under nine several leases, for terms of years and lives, at rents amounting to £276 6s. 7d., as specified in the printed Rental and particulars of sale. The House and the chief part of the Lands are unoccupied. The Ordnance Valuation of the whole is £183.

Dated this 12th day of May, 1860.

R. DENNY URLIN, Examiner.

DESCRIPTIVE PARTICULARS.

The House, built in the modern style, stands on the north side of Dalkey Hill, and commands extensive views of the Bay of Dublin, including Clontarf, Baldoyle, Lambay Island, and Howth on the North, with Rochestown, Kingstown, Stillorgan, and the Dublin Mountains on the West. It contains three large reception-rooms, and seven bed-chambers, servants' apartments, kitchen, pantry, scullery, china closet, bath, and water-closet, with every requisite out office, steward's house in the yard, coachhouses, and stabling, also handsome entrance and gate lodge, from which the house is approached by a neat carriage drive, laid out through a handsome lawn, containing about eight acres, tastefully planted with forest trees and shrubs of the choicest description. The land, which is of the best description for agricultural purposes, affords some of the most highly favoured sites for building. A handsome road has been made at a very considerable expense, opening up the land for villa lots, for which there is now a steadily increasing demand.

For rentals and particulars apply at the Office of the said Court; to

The success which has attended the Art Union lately established by the French Government, at Cork, and the advantages which indused the formation of shilling Art Unions in Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, and other large towns, and the result has been most satisfactory; 31,800 Subscribers have been obtained by the Liverpool Art Union alone, and Pictures to the amount of £1,300 distributed as Prizes. A shilling societies are peculiarly adapted for diffusing a more general taste for Art, and spreading its refining influences amongst all classes, it has been deemed advisable to establish a similar association in Dublin. RULES. A Subscription of One Shilling... upwards constitutes a Member of the Society for the year in which the Subscription is paid. Members shall, for each Shilling subscribed, be entitled to one chance at the Annual Distribution of Prizes. The money subscribed shall, after paying all necessary expenses, be divided into different sums by the Committee, and apportioned by lot amongst the Subscribers as Prizes. Each Prizeholder shall have the right to select for himself, or by his nominee, from the Royal Hibernian Academy's Exhibition, or any other public exhibition in Dublin approved by the Committee, a Picture or Work in Sculpture to the value of the prize so apportioned. Prizeholders who shall signify the wish may have their pictures chosen by the Committee. Prizeholders shall have the option of commissioning a picture or work in sculpture from artists resident in Ireland, on intimating to the Committee their wish to exercise this privilege; provided that the work so commissioned shall be exhibited at the next ensuing Exhibition of the Royal Hibernian Academy, and shall not be either a portrait or bust. The Distribution of Prizes shall take place on the first of June in each year, or as near thereto as the Committee may appoint. All the works selected shall, at the option of the Committee, be publicly exhibited in Dublin, after which they will become the property of the several Prizeholders. All paintings and bronzes shall be made by the Committee at the close of the Exhibition. (By order) M. ANGELO HAYES, Secretary. 4, Salem-place, Dublin. The arrangements as to the selection are the same as those of the London Art Union. All letters of inquiry must have a postage stamp enclosed. Tickets may be had from any of the Committee, from the Agents, or from the Secretary, who will enclose a Ticket on receipt of thirteen postage stamps.

MONEY MARKET AND COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

(WRITTEN SPECIALLY FOR THE IRISH TIMES.)

Dublin, Saturday Evening.

The past has been an eventful week, and the condition of the Money market seems no longer to be the index pointing out the value of Funds; it must, of course, considerably heighten or lessen the effects proceeding from other grave causes; but, while the Continent of Europe remains in its present distracted state, we must look to Sicily, and, it report speaks truly, to Turkey also, for the influences which will hence guide fluctuations in Funds. The intelligence of to-day goes far to confirm the strong surmises which have already been freely made, and concerning which there appears to be apparently little doubt, that Garibaldi's expedition is largely assisted, if not principally directed, by the mysterious and powerful ruler of France. This belief has strongly contributed to cause considerable uneasiness to the financial public, and is of itself sufficiently powerful to depress prices, independent of the many other circumstances which at present lend their co-operation in promoting the distrustful feeling. At the time of the Russian war, France and England were united against a common foe which is now believed to be in alliance with the former. England had nothing to fear but the increase of her national debt to the extent of over sixty millions; while at the present time we cannot foresee the consequences likely to arise from any successes in Southern Italy. The annexation of Savoy drove Funds down one per cent. The occupation by French troops of several maritime ports in the Mediterranean may clash with the interests of England, and may have a greater effect if realised. We don't wish to be alarmists, but we think it only right to give the gist of the feelings which at present largely occupy the public mind. The greatest effect, indeed, has been produced in Paris, where a considerable fall has taken place, and has been one of the greatest of the causes which produced depression in English Government Securities, which all accounts agree in stating would have been more marked but for the dividend which is now becoming due in Consols. On the 5th of next month there will be about 25s. per cent. due on Consols, and, if this amount be deducted from the price of this stock in London for the June account, we will have its actual market value.

If we except the last few days, the demand for money was not very active during the week, although even the best bills were not currently discounted under the Bank minimum. During the last few days the demand has somewhat increased both for discounts and on the Stock Exchange, and full rates have been obtained without difficulty.

The arrivals of Bullion have been very large during the week, being estimated at three-quarters of a million; but as yet only a limited amount has been taken into the Bank. We learn, however, that the shipments of silver to the East are likely to be larger, and this may cause an exportation of gold to the Continent, in payment for silver. Nearly all the vessels known to have been out have arrived from Australia—namely, the Jessie Boyle, the White Star, and the Result. The other vessels are the Omar Pacha, out 75 days, with £77,000; and the Dream, out 65 days, with £26,470.

The last weekly return from the Bank of England is a very favourable one, showing an increase of as much as £429,894 in the reserve, and £154,024 in the bullion; the rest has been increased by only £6,958; but the circulation has fallen off to the extent of £344,227. In other securities there has been a decrease of £472,985, and this shows the moderate nature of the applications at the Bank.

Funds in London were very weak in tendency during the week, but not by any means so much so as the Railway Share market. The anticipation of increased dividends, though correct, led to speculations for a rise in most Railway Stocks, which have suffered by a reaction, the effect of over purchases.

In the Dublin markets weakness was, of course, observable, which is more marked in New Threes than Consols, the former appearing nearly one per cent. under the latter in price, which in this market appears strange, both Stocks being always dealt in ex-interest. In consequence of a slight reaction in London, prices were better supported here to-day, but the Share markets were extremely dull. In Local or Railway Debentures no dealings; Bank Stock was inquired for; Nationals were done at 5s. per Share reduction, but buyers at the quotation; Atlantic Steam were offered at the last price; Dundalks also were on sale; all other Steam Shares were in excellent demand. British and Irish showing an advance of 5s. per share. There were no dealings in Mining Shares, except in Carysforts at an advance; these Shares have been in better demand during the last few days, owing to a report of a discovery at the surface; the "lode" is stated to be particularly rich in metal. There were buyers of general Mines at the last price; sellers at £5. Mining Company of Ireland would have been taken at the last quotation, but no sellers appeared. Railway Shares were very dull, Cork and Passages being the only ones showing life; they were very steady at the former price. Belfast Junctions were weak, at a decline of an eighth, while the decline in Great Southern Stock is no less than £1 17s. 6d. per cent. To-day's quotation is the first since the withdrawal of the Canal Bill, and the full effect is therefore shown. Canal Stock was offered at the last price; £40 would have been given. In other Shares no changes, except in Waterford and Limerick £6 per cent. Preference, which show a fractional advance.

The annual general meeting of the proprietors of the Provincial Bank of Ireland was held on Thursday, and the financial statement submitted to the meeting was even more than usually satisfactory. The amount of undivided profits for the year ended in March, 1859, amounted to £236,521. Out of this sum was declared two half-yearly dividends of 10 per cent. each, of which amounted to £108,000, after the deduction of which was left a balance of £128,521, which, added to the profits of the last year of £111,783, raised the amount available for dividend to £240,504. Out of this sum the directors have declared the usual dividend, at the rate of £20 per cent. per annum, and have made a small addition to the rest. Nothing can be more pleasing than to witness a continuance in prosperity of this, one of our oldest and most important institutions; it is creditable to the management, and creditable to the country, it is an evidence of the stability of its trade, and of the commercial character of its people.

To the shareholders of another and similar establishment, which has been lately growing greatly in popular favour—namely, the National Bank—an anonymous circular has been issued by a party, styling himself "A Proprietor of the National Bank," in which he suggests that auditors, not being directors of the company, should be appointed to check and audit the accounts. In this we perfectly concur, as we think that, in all public companies, but especially in a bank, the most important duty which the shareholders owe to themselves is, to see that the accounts are properly audited by shareholders, independent of the directors. If the circular was merely confined to the advancement of an opinion having reference to the necessity of auditors, it might fairly be one for the consideration of the shareholders; but it loses a great deal, if not the entire of its weight, by an attack of a grossly personal nature, against some of the directors and the chief inspectors, and by the species of innuendo which pervades the entire document. If the writer be a proprietor in the National Bank, it seems strange he should privately endeavour to injure the directors, or to embarrass them, and stranger still that he should base most of his remarks upon a document which was issued in the year 1850, when the Bank's position was nothing to that which it now is, and which, after the experience of ten years, proceeds more from, probably, some private pique than from a sincere desire to promote the prosperity of the Bank.

The Customs duties for the past week were £18,754 5s. 5d., against £19,917 last year, thus:—

A strong effort is at present being made to change the management of the Waterford and Kilkenny Company from London to Dublin, and we trust it may be fully successful, as we can have but little confidence in management carried on so far from the locale of operations. Past experience is of no value if it does not teach us that all English management of Irish railways has, in every case, failed while in almost every instance; Irish management has been successful, and we hope the shareholders will now make an exertion to permanently benefit what ought to be a fine property.

The following is a list of the foreign arrivals during the week:—Athanasian, from Bordeaux, wines, brandies, &c; Wilhelm, from Stettin, wheat; Hermann, from Pillaw, wheat; Jane, from Barbadoes, sugar; Agenora, from Caen, wheat and flour; Pere Ravain, from Nantes, wheat; Lydia, from Nantes, wheat; Ida, from Cavalla, Indian corn; Luna, from Koningsberg, wheat; Mosquito, from Guantamo, sugar.

The following vessels cleared outwards for foreign ports:—Jean Baptiste Marie, for Bordeaux; Catharina, Brussels, soda and lime; Albion, Archangel; Judith, Archangel; Flying Fish, Barbadoes, coal and coal.

The Mining Share market in London has been rather dull during the week, although great fluctuations are in some instances shown. The recent decline in the standard of Copper has partly been the means of limiting business, while the influences which affected the fibure markets generally also contributed to do so. The following we copy from the London Mining Journal on the state of the Metal markets:—

No feature of any importance has transpired materially affecting the position of metals, but there is no manifest improvement in the demand, and the turn in prices appear slightly in favor of buyers. The general aspect of our market remains as previously reported.

COPPER.—Shipping orders are scarce, and prices easy. One or two large transactions for consumption are reported, but as the deliveries will extend over some time no immediate benefit will be realised.

IRON.—In rails a few orders have been taken at £3 2s. 6d., f.o.b. in Wales. At this very low price ironmasters are quite indifferent about selling, and merely accept sufficient to maintain their men at work. Merchant bars are in rather less demand, and prices may shortly follow the course of rails, as there is rather a wider margin existing at the present moment than usual. Staffordshire descriptions are quite without any alteration to notice in quotations. Swedish bars, on the spot, of Indian assortment, £12 5s. for arrival; £12 has been accepted.

LEAD.—Sellers are indisposed to make any further concession in former rates, and, although the market is void of animation, prices appear to have reached their lowest.

SPELTER.—Second-hand lots have beenforced for sale at £20 10s., but buyers have sprung up the last few days at this price, and our market has now somewhat stiffened in consequence. Importers are sellers of small plates on the spot at £20 15s.; small lots, or broken warrants, £21.

TIN.—English continues in a firmer position. Banca and Straits in limited request, but slightly improved in value.

TIN PLATES—In moderate demand; IC coke sold at 24s.

STEEL.—The stock is light, and supplies are barely equal to requirements. Prices are not likely to recede.

QUICKSILVER.—No change whatever to note.

LONDON PRODUCE MARKET, MAY 19.—Sugar, little doing to-day. Market 6d lower for the week. Four cargoes sold yesterday afternoon. Coffee quiet. Tea, no change. Rice active. Saltpetre firm at late advance, but little doing. Tallow market quiet at 32s 6d; spot 51s 6d; June, 51s, last 3 months.

LIVERPOOL COTTON MARKET, MAY 19.—Sales probably 6,000 or 7,000 bales; no imports. No change in market.

GLASGOW IRON MARKET, MAY 19.—No 1, 55s to 56s 3d; mixed numbers, warrants, 51s 11d to 51s 9d; No 2, 49s 6d to 50s. Market firm.

NEWCASTLE COAL MARKET, MAY 19.—Fitters' wheat in small supply, and found ready sale at an advance of 1s to 2s. per quarter on the rates of this day week. South country and foreign in good demand, at a similar improvement, but the latter is held at such extreme rates that business is impeded. Flour sells steady, at 1s. per sack over last week's prices.

PARIS, SATURDAY.—The Bourse has improved. The final quotations of Rentes was 69-20, and ¼ higher than yesterday.

MONETARY AND COMMERCIAL

(Times City Article.)

Friday Evening.

The funds experienced less agitation to-day, but prices show only a fractional improvement. The market having been undisturbed by any telegrams of importance, the tendency to recover might, perhaps, have been more distinct but for the circumstance of the opening prices from Paris showing a further fall. An increased demand for money likewise operated unfavourably. The demand for discount to-day has been larger than of late, and at the bank a good amount of business has been done. At the foreign exchanges this afternoon, the Amsterdam, Hamburg, and Paris rates were about same as last quotations. Vienna and Trieste were again higher, owing to a further depreciation in the Austrian currency. Bills on Naples and Sicily were unsaleable. About £3,000 in gold was taken to the bank to-day. The shipment of specie, per the Pera, represent £248,544, the whole being silver, with the exception of £4,220. The railway market to-day presented rather a better appearance than yesterday, but the tendency to recovery is checked by a reported heaviness on the country markets. The traffic returns of the United Kingdom for week ending May 12th, shows an increase of £34,680 over the corresponding week of last year.

(Daily News' City Article.)

Friday Evening.

The funds opened with a further firm appearance, and an improvement in the French funds was responded to on this side. The four o'clock quotations were ¼ per cent. above those of yesterday, and at a later hour an improvement of ⅛ was quoted. In the market for British Railway Stocks there was likewise a tendency to recovery, particularly in the afternoon the commercial demand for money was active, and a brisk business was done at the bank. The supply in the open market has diminished, and the best bills were not taken below 4⅞ to 4½ per cent.

DUBLIN, MONDAY, MAY 21.

IF ever a reform in any portion of our military organisation was required, it is now imperatively called for by the existing condition of the Militia. England has her Coast Guards, her Naval Volunteers, her Army, and her Volunteer Rifle Corps, to depend on in emergencies. We, too, have homes, and honour, and proportionate wealth, to defend, yet we have no defences except that afforded by our Constabulary and the Militia. A better force than the former it is impossible to find, but it is limited in number, and must be scattered over a wide extent of country. The Militia is nominally much more numerous, but really less effective. We are constrained to assert that, as an offensive or defensive force, the Militia cannot be considered to have much weight, and this not from the fault of the officers or men, or their inaptitude for military training, but because of the absurd regulations which are established for its management.

In the first place, when a regiment is disbanded after its twenty-one days' training, it is still believed to exist in the shape of "a staff," counting, drummers, sergeants, and all, about 16 effective men. This is supposed to be the soul of the regiment, existing, like that of the Rosicrusians, without a body, or waiting for one. During eleven months of hibernation, these 16 men who form the staff are occupied with anything but staff practice. The sergeants lay aside their military occupation, and, in some instances, pursue "trades," or other means of making money, in the towns where they are stationed. This is not a soldier's life, nor one fitted for an instructor of soldiers. The staff of every regiment ought to be increased to at least 40 men, and these should be bound to perfect themselves in the duties of a staff, and not to relegate themselves to any trades or civil employments.

If it be said that the expenses of the Militia are already heavy, and that Parliament is not inclined to make any additional grant, we answer that it is the most false economy possible to destroy the efficiency of any force by a niggarly parsimony. Moreover, we can point out the means of effecting a very considerable saving. In the Line the regiments are commanded by the Lieutenant-Colonel; he alone enjoys the administration and direction of the regiment; but when a Militia regiment is called out it is, in many cases, commanded by a Colonel, while the Lieutenant-Colonel sinks into insignificance. One of these two officers is absolutely unnecessary, and the suppression of one or other of them would supply funds towards an increase of the working staff.

Nor is there any test of the efficiency of the officers. An inspection, indeed, is held—that is, a general goes down upon an appointed day and hour, all are en grande tenue. The General looks for a moment upon the body before him, utters the usual lawyers of compliment, passes an eulogium upon everything and every person, and believes that to praise the force as it is is part, and no small part, of his duty. An inspection, to be worth anything, should be real and effective, searching and complete.

The medical officers of the Militia have much reason to complain. Their position is uncertain, and their pay is miserable; still, they have duties to perform, as to the examination of the recruits, which seem often to be performed imperfectly. For instance, the Militia is commonly considered to be the school and nursery of the Line. Although the men pass the Militia Surgeon, they cannot as easily pass the examination of the Surgeon of the Line. Of the Militiamen who volunteer into the Line, fully half are rejected for bodily defects or debility by the Regimental Surgeon. There must be something wrong here. Either the standard of the Militia is too low, and that of the Line too high, or the examination of the candidates for enlistment into the Militia is not performed as carefully as it should be.

When meetings for training the Militia are held there should be present from six to seven hundred men. If the Militia were really, as it is nominally,

Miss Rolle, Lord Conyers, Lady Bateman and Hon. Miss Hanbury, Lord Strathedon, Right Hon. Sir Bulwer Litton, M.P.; Andrew Agnew, M.P.; Mr. Bernal Osborne, M.P., and Mrs. Osborne; and Sir Richard Levinge, M.P.

Mrs. Sydney Cosby has arrived from Stradbally Hall, Queen's County, at Beenham House, near Reading, which Mrs. Cosby has taken for a lengthened period.

Mr. G. W. Sandford, Esq., has arrived at 1, Gresham-terrace, Kingstown, from Wills Grove, Castlerea.

The Army.

The following Regimental order has been issued by Colonel Hemphill, commanding the 26th Cameronians, in consequence of the lamented death of Captain John Calling, Portobello Barracks, Dublin.

"Dublin, 19th May, 1860.

"It is with extreme sorrow that the commanding officer announces to the Regiment the death of Captain Calling, which took place accidentally yesterday afternoon, at the barracks, when in the performance of his duty. Colonel Hemphill feels satisfied that every individual in the Regiment will deplore (as he does) the loss of an officer who, from the time of his appointment to the corps, has always evinced so much zeal for the service, and so much interest in the Regiment to which he belonged.

"As a tribute of respect to the memory of the deceased, Col. Hemphill requests that the officers will wear crape on the arm for two months."

The following Regiments are under orders for Dublin—viz., the 5th Light Dragoons, the 15th and 96th Regiments, to relieve the three ordered to the Curragh. The 30th Regiment, now at the Curragh, will relieve the 18th Foot, at present ordered to Dublin.

PICKERS' UNIFORMS.—It is rumoured, but we cannot vouch for the correctness of the report, that the dress of the officers in the Army is about to be again changed. It is said that the tunic will be retained; but that wings (as they rarely worn by the flank companies) will be added. If this be true, it will be a decided improvement.—United Service Gazette.

Orders were received on Friday from the Horse Guards for the officers in command of the three battalions of infantry at Chatham garrison, directing the following troops from the depôts of the East India depots to be held in readiness to embark for India—viz., 60 men of the 1st battalion 19th Regiment; one sergeant and 69 men of the 1st battalion 23rd Royal Welch Fusiliers; one sergeant and 97 men of the 85th Royal Local Sanwell Regiment; two sergeants, one drummer, and 207 men of the 73d Regiment; 96 men of the 75th Regiment; and 115 men of the 77th Regiment—total, 769 rank and file, of all ranks, the whole of whom embark for Calcutta. The following reinforcements are to embark for Kurrachee, viz.—60 men of the 1st battalion 24th Regiment; 50 men of the 32d Light Infantry, 85 men of the 81st Regiment, and 90 men of the 94th Regiment—total, 205 men.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge has issued a general order, directing that the shaplains to the army, both at home and abroad, are in future to wear the military gown which has been decided upon, and sealed patterns of which may be inspected at the Horse Guards. The gentleman order states that the uniform is not to be worn by the chaplains at all times, but on State occasions, reviews, field days in camp, and on other important occasions. The same uniform is to be worn by the Episcopalian, Presbyterian, and Roman Catholic chaplains.

The purchase of St. John's Abbey farm, near Colchester, is stated to have been effected for the purposes of a military playground. The extent of the farm is about 160 acres.

(From the Army and Navy Gazette.)

We have heard Mr. Ricardo's name mentioned for the chairmanship of the Royal Commission to inquire into the system of building our ships. It is stated that "My Lords" will find it an easy matter to select the professional members of the commission.

We understand that the tendency of the recent evidence before the Committee on Military Organisation is strongly in favour of vesting the supreme authority over, as well as the responsibility for, the conduct of the military administration in the Secretary of State, assisted by competent professional advisors in the shape of a board like the Admiralty.

Major Hugh Rose is formally appointed Commander-in-Chief in India, with effect from Friday; and Sir William Mansfield becomes Commander-in-Chief at Bombay from the same date.

The Navy.

Her Majesty's ship Lizard has arrived at Harwich.

The screw steamship Orion, 91, Capt. John J. B. E. Frere, from Gibraltar May 5, which arrived in Plymouth Sound on Thursday, brought home naval and military invalids and the wives and families of some soldiers. The seamen were transferred by the steamer Zephyr to the guardship Impregnable, in Hamoaze, and the soldiers and women were landed at Mount Wise. The Orion has discharged her powder, and will go into Hamoaze as soon as convenient. She left all the stores she could spare at Malta. The Dor is and Scourge left at Gibraltar when she left.

The War Department steamer Balaklava sailed from Plymouth on Thursday for Woolwich with stores, saved from the stranded transport Havering.

It is probable that the screw steam storeship Himalaya, Capt. Rumbe, after landing her troops at Portsmouth, will be taken to Plymouth to be docked at Keyham Steamyard in the dock, which was lengthened about three years since expressly to receive her.

The artisans of the Devonport Dockyard are preparing the ways for launching the screw steamship Gibraltar, 101. The launch will probably take place the first spring tides in June.

The Traveller gunboat, tender to the Asia, steam guardship of ordinary at Portsmouth, has been supplied with new buoys at the north wall of the steam basin. On removing the old boilers from this vessel it was discovered that a number of her through bolts underneath the boilers had never been "clinched." As the vessel had not been placed in dock, it is impossible to say that this would be the only defect found to exist in connection with her original construction.

The Ranger, 5 screw schooner, Commander Wratislaw, arrived at Spithead on Friday from Woolwich, on her way to the coast of Africa.

THE LATE FIRE IN PARLIAMENT-STREET.

We have much pleasure in acknowledging the receipt of 5s. from John Nunn, Esq., Mount Vernon Cottage, Kingstown, for the relief of the sufferers by the late calamitous fire. If any member of the committee appointed to collect this fund would call at our office, we would be happy to hand over to him the contributions which we have, up to the present, received.

THE GARIBALDI FUND.

We have to acknowledge the receipt of the following contributions:—

A Friend of Liberty,	...	£1	0 0
A Subscriber,	...	0	10 0
A Lady,	...	0	5 0
J. M.,	...	0	2 6

We shall be happy to take charge of further contributions, which we shall forward to the Central Association in Glasgow, until one is established in Dublin.

BAND IN MERRION-SQUARE.

By permission of Col. Harding, C.B., the Band of the 22nd Regiment will perform in the square this afternoon, from 4:30 to 6:30 o'clock, weather permitting.

METROPOLITAN HALL—SPECIAL RELIGIOUS SERVICES.—Yesterday (Sunday) afternoon, the three o'clock special religious service was held in the above-named hall, when the Rev. John Hall was the preacher. The subject of his discourse was "Lessons from the Book of Job." The congregation was unusually large. The service was commenced by singing an appropriate hymn, at the conclusion of which the preacher offered up a long and earnest prayer, and afterwards the fifth chapter of the Epistle of St. James, from the latter part of the eleventh verse of which he took his text.

THE REV. MR. FORREST.—The Rev. R. W. Forrest concluded his short course of lectures in the Metropolitan Hall, on Friday evening last, before an assemblage such as, perhaps, never met before in Dublin, for religious worship. There could not have been less than 1,300 persons within its walls on that occasion. He delivered, in the course of the week, five sermons on the following subjects:—1st, Christ; 2nd, God in Christ—the Orphan's Father; 3rd, Prayer; 4th, the Christian's Joy; 5th, Heaven or Hell. In all these solemn meetings, the Rev. Thomas Scott conducted the devotional exercises.

It is said that Garibaldi is another illustrious Irishman, and that he was born in Mullinahone, in the county of Tipperary; that his father, Garrett Baldwin, was a schoolmaster, and nicknamed for shortness, as well as affectionate familiarity, by his pupils, "Garry Baldy." On the death of the pedagogue, his son, Garry Baldy, jun., proceeded to Rome to his uncle, an ecclesiastic in that city, where the liquid southern chiming in with the euphonious language of love and poetry, he adopted it and immortal lead it by his chivalrous bravery.—"Limerick Chronicle."

LATEST NEWS.

(BY MAGNETIC TELEGRAPH.)

IRISH TIMES OFFICE,

Four o'clock, a.m.

AMERICA.

QUEENSTOWN, SATURDAY AFTERNOON.—The Royal Mail steamship Africa, arrived here early this afternoon, with New York dates to the 9th, and landed all mails except those for Liverpool. The Bohemian, City of Washington, and Teutonia had arrived out. The Africa passed off Sandyhook. A large steamer, supposed to be the Asia, and the British ships Pioneer and Dreadnought, bound in. A resolution had passed the Senate, authorising a vessel to transport not more than five astronomers to a point where the eclipse of the sun, on 18th July next, could best be observed. A resolution to invite the Prince of Wales to visit New York has been adopted by the New York Board of Aldermen. Mexican news 15 days later. The Marin affair still rankled among the clerical party, who talk of nothing but revenge. Forced loans, particularly on America, was the order of the day. Neither party were doing much.

QUEENSTOWN, SUNDAY EVENING.—The Royal Mail steamship Arabia arrived here at an early hour this morning, and waited at her moorings until six p.m., when, having received the mails, latest telegrams, and seventy men of the 39th Regiment, she proceeded again all wellf, or Halifax and Boston.

CALIFORNIA.

SAN FRANCISCO, APRIL 28TH.—News unimportant. Trade was somewhat reviving.

NEW YORK, MAY 9.—There was an improved feeling in the cotton market yesterday, and nearly 3,000 bales were sold on the basis of 11¼c. for middling. The flour market, under the influence of increased receipts, and the character of the late news from Europe, was heavy for most descriptions. Common and medium grades of State and Western closed 5c. to 10c. per barrel lower. At the concession the market was rather more active. Southern flour was less active and buoyant, though without change of moment in quotations. Wheat was rather more active at the recent concession in prices, with pretty free sales. Corn was heavy and lower, while sales were moderate. Pork firmly held, while sales were moderate. Stocks active, and prices improved. Exchange dull at 1-9 ¼ to ½. Freights to Liverpool, ¼ to 5-32.

NEW ORLEANS, MAY 7.—Cotton sales to day, 7,500 bales. Market firmer at 3¼.

SARDINIA.

TURIN, MAY 19TH.—The committee appointed by the Chamber of Deputies to consider the treaty of the 24th March had a conference with Count Cavour. The "Dirith," an opposition organ, says the explanations given by the Minister are not satisfactory to the opposition party. The Minister, on being requested by the committee to communicate the diplomatic correspondence, required that he had no other documents than those already published. The committee then demanded the purport and the influence of the treaty upon the future of Italy. The Minister replied that the treaty was a grievous necessity.

EGYPT.

ALEXANDRIA, MAY 15TH.—Heavy rains had carried away a part of the railway between Cairo and Suez; travellers to India have thereby been delayed two days. The official French mission for the exploration of the Red Sea has been well received by Sahab Pasha.

THE INSURRECTION IN SICILY.

NAPLES, SATURDAY NIGHT.—It is asserted here that the fight at Catalatini was not decisive. The Neapolitan troops re-entered Palermo. Two columns, of three thousand men each, have been sent to pursue the insurgents. It is estimated that 6,000 Sicilians have joined Garibaldi.

PARIS, SUNDAY EVENING.—The Patrie of this day, in speaking of the affair at Calabria, says the volunteers, having been attacked with great vigour, energetically defended themselves, and effected a retreat in good order, leaving behind a number of killed. According to last advices the insurrection was being extended and organised in a great many directions. The same journal adds, that when the detachments which are being organised have joined the volunteers who have disappeared at Marsala, the whole body will number about 12,000 men, well armed and provisioned.

THE BOMBAY MAILS.

The Panther, with the above mails, arrived at Marseilles at eleven p.m. on the 19th instant. The mails left for London at midnight.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The freedom of the city of London was, on Saturday, presented to Captain Sir Leopold M'Clintock, on account of his dauntless efforts in the research after Sir J. Franklin.

Mr. H. Burnand, of Lloyd's, has been appointed superintendent of the underwriting department of the Thames and Mersey Insurance Company, at a salary of £5,000 per annum.

A review will be held of the whole of the troops composing the Dublin garrison, in the Phœnix Park, on Tuesday, May 29th, at which his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant will be present.

AN UNHEALTHY APRIL.—The Registrar-General for Scotland, who issues a monthly report in respect of the eight principal Scotch towns, has already published his report for April, but the chief thing he has to say of it is unfavourable. He registered the deaths of 2,537 persons out of a population estimated at 908,146—the largest number of deaths he ever registered in April, and 612 more than in April, 1859. He attributes this to the low mean temperature (42·1 deg.), the very high daily range, amounting on the mean to 19 deg.; the dryness of the air, the prevalence of the keen arid east wind, and the small fall of rain, which was only about a third of the usual amount. It was his lot in the month to record in his death-book the name of a person whom, with characteristic caution or national pride, he only designates as "perhaps" the oldest inhabitant of Scotland—an old soldier, for some years receiving parochial aid, who was born in Lairg, Sutherland, and died at Perth, at the extreme age of 107.

CARLOW RIFLES.—The officers and men belonging to the above corps assembled at the Carlow Barracks on Monday last for 27 days' training. The men mustered strongly on the first day, there being 255 present out of 311, the full strength of the regiment, and others have since joined, so that it is very probable that nearly the entire number will soon be on the muster-roll. The following officers were present:—Colonel Sir Thomas Butler, Bart.; Lieutenant-Colonel Keogh, Major Batty, Captains John Cliffe Vigors, Philip C. Newton, and J. Blackney; Lieutenants Browne, FitzMaurice, and Butler; Ensigns Humfrey and Eustace; besides the officers of the Staff—Captain and Adjutant George M. Knipe, Surgeon T. Belton, and Quartermaster W. Beatty. The men are very orderly and well conducted.—Carlow Sentinel.

It is rumoured that a great number of armed Russian "merchantmen" are now collected at Nikolaieff on the Boug. It is also said, that Russian troops are being concentrated on the east coast of the Black Sea.

NEWTOWNSTEWART.—Within the last month or two a library and news-room, well supplied with materials, has been opened in this town, and a Literary Association organised under the auspices of the Rev. J. MacIvor, D.D.

ROYAL HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.—At the council meeting held on Saturday, at the society's rooms, West-land-row, preparatory to the second exhibition to be held on Thursday next, George Armstrong, Esq., 65, Lower Leeson-street, and John Galloway, jun., Esq., 6, Clifton-terrace, Monkstown, proposed by Maziere J. Brady, Esq., and seconded by Wm. Plant, Esq., M.D., Maurice Brooks, Esq., Rathmines Castle, proposed by J. W. Lane, Esq., and seconded by Dr. Plant, and Mr. Lynch, gardener to Benjamin Lee Guinness, Esq., proposed by Thos. Bewley, Esq., and seconded by J. J. Jacobs, Esq., St. Anne's, Clontarf, were elected members of the society.

COUNTY CARLOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Leighlinbridge, May 19.

ALLEGED CRIMINAL ASSAULT AGAINST A MOTHER.—About a fortnight ago there was an inquest held at Ballinree, near this town, on the body of a female infant found buried within a short distance of the police station. From the evidence then adduced, it appeared that the child's grandmother was seen by Sub-constable Whelan making a grave, in which the child's mother, a woman named Mary Harvey, soon after deposited the body. Both women were placed under arrest, but were discharged at the termination of the inquest, Dr. Boxwell, who made a post mortem examination, stating that there were no marks of violence on the child, which, however, was born alive. The magistrates of the locality, fearing that some foul play had been practised on the infant, have since had Mary Harvey arrested and committed to Carlow Jail to stand her trial at the next assizes.

COUNTY GALWAY—ACCIDENTAL DEATH.

Tuam, Friday Night.

On yesterday an inquest was held at a place called Crumlin, on the Tuam and Athenry Railway, on the body of Michael Hanlon, a waggon driver, in the employment of William Dargan, Esq., when the coroner's jury returned the following verdict:—"We find that, on the 16th May, 1860, Michael Hanlon was driving three horses, and five empty waggons, along the Railway embankment at Crumlin, in the county Galway, when, accidentally, they all fell down the slope of said embankment; when and where the said Michael Hanlon was killed by one of the wheels of the loaded waggon passing over his body."

THE GREAT EASTERN.

The date at which the Great Eastern is to start on her first voyage has been now fixed. The scene on board is one of constant activity, and it is confidently hoped that the vessel will be completely finished by the 9th of June, the day in question.

Many improvements have been made in the details of the great ship since she has been lying at Southampton. So far as the shipwright's portion of the work is concerned, it has been found necessary to put in iron stanchions to support the cargo deck, to refix the boat-davits, to give additional support to the coal bunkers, to cut a tunnel through them, and to render the iron masts more rigid. These constituted the principal requirements of the Board of Trade so far as the ship was concerned, and all these alterations and additions have been provided. This, however, is not all. The directors have gone far beyond the Board of Trade requirements, and have sanctioned many improvements conducive to the comfort and convenience of the crew and the passengers. The dining saloons have been connected together by a gallery, thus avoiding the necessity of going on deck to reach any part of the saloon of an adjoining bulkhead. These parts are being decorated with excellent taste, the immense area of iron wall is fast being transformed into panels of maple wood by the decorators, and the rivet heads are so treated as to appear like knots in the wood. Racks for glasses are provided to swing from the roof, and cellars, larders, and kitchens extensively remodelled. The grand saloon—the rarest show of the ship and the triumph of Mr. Crace—has been retouched and revivified, and looks fresh and bright as when it left the hands of its decorative artists. The sleeping cabins are to a great extent refitted, and, where required, their ventilation has been improved.

The attention of the directors has been by no means confined to the decorations of the vessel. The stupendous machinery has been subject to the most careful examination. In the paddle engines—those Goliaths of their kind—several changes have been made, the combined effect of which will be to give an increase of 300-horse power, and to obtain an additional knot an hour of speed. The openings of the slide valves of the huge cylinders have been enlarged by a few inches, and the vast engine will now breathe more freely, and its exhausted steam find a quicker escape when it has done its work. The steam from the four boilers which enters these cylinders is sufficient to raise the piston and give motion to the machinery, but the slides being too small, the steam does not rush out so quickly as to permit the piston to descend easily to its work. The engines, instead of being choked, will now be free, and this improvement will add a mile to the speed of the giant. Another very important change is the complete superannuation of those intractable "donkey engines," which gave so much trouble in former trips. They will henceforth, so far as this particular ship is concerned, lead a life of inglorious ease. The work once assigned to them of supplying the boilers has been transferred to a very simple and ingenious apparatus, the invention of Mr. Giffard. A pipe below the level of the water line keeps up a constant supply of water in a hollow cone or basin enclosed within a larger tube; upon this water a jet of steam is conveyed by a pipe from the boiler, having the same pressure as the other steam, and this forces the water by a connecting pipe into the boiler. The stream is continuous so long as there is steam generating, and beyond this the supply of water is not required.

The number of passengers to be taken to New York has been limited to 300, all first-class. The passage money out will be £25, and for the return voyage as well £40, exclusive of wines and spirits. She will also take a limited quantity of fine goods as cargo or freight, at £3 per ton measurement of forty cubic feet. The time which she will stay at New York depends upon a variety of circumstances, the principal, no doubt, being the amount of attraction which she may prove to the American sight-seers: it will probably not be less than two months. A very fair demand for berths and freight already exists, and there is no reason to suppose that there will be any deficiency in the number of passengers required.

MUSEUM OF IRISH INDUSTRY.—The usual courses of day and evening practical chemical lectures, which have been in course of delivery in the laboratory of this institution during the session (1859-60) now about to close, are almost completed, and some of the examinations have already taken place. The first two examinations of the four, to be held at the close of the lessons on organic chemistry by Professor Galloway, were held on the 14th and 16th instant, and the result is a gratifying proof of the soundness of the instruction conveyed, and of the high degree of efficiency attained by the class. The maximum number of marks was 1,200, of which one student has obtained the entire number, and two others 1,280 and 1,225 respectively. The questions were of an eminently practical nature, and most difficult of solution. We cannot but again express our great satisfaction at the success which has attended the working of the practical chemical classes of this valuable institution; and we hope in a few days to be able to announce the names of those students who have proved successful.

THE CHAMPIONSHIP.—The contest for the Champion's belt has been settled in a friendly way. Sayers and Heenan, accompanied by their backers, met on Friday at the office of Bell's Life. Shortly after twelve o'clock Tom Sayers arrived at the office, accompanied by his friend Mr. Bennet, and others. Tom was followed soon after by his gallant opponent, the "Boy," having also a number of friends with him, including Macdonald. Preliminaries having been arranged, a long discussion ensued, though in the most friendly spirit, during which both men defended the course they had pursued since the memorable contest, with regard to the claims the one had to continue to hold the belt, and the other to demand possession of it. Various proposals were made, discussed, amended, and rejected, but ultimately an arrangement was come to which apparently gave satisfaction to the chief parties concerned, and, it is to be hoped, will be equally satisfactory to all other persons who have an interest in the affair. The following are the heads of the arrangement, and which were signed by the principals:—In the first both Tom Sayers and the Benicia Boy are each to have a belt. These belts, we understand, are to be equal in every point of value and magnificence to "the belt" itself, and the cost of their manufacture will be defrayed by public subscription. It was also positively decided that Tom Sayers should never enter the ring again. The most important question which was settled by this agreement was that which affected the disposal of "the Champion's belt." This is to remain open, or, to use the words of a celebrated member of the P.R., "the belt is to remain where it is." The result is that the competition for the champion's bels will be open to any two of the fancy who are game enough to enter the lists; but it is not at all improbable that the gallant Benicia Boy will use every endeavour in his power to get the prize into his possession.

As there has been almost as much talk about this new celebrated belt as served to arrange the boundaries of Europe at the Congress of Vienna, perhaps a description of it will be interesting to many who have read so much about, but have never seen, the wondrous prize. It consists of a black breastband of patent leather, upon which is fastened seven silver plates, each being about four inches square. Running along the edges of these plates, and standing out in clear relief, are model representations of the ropes and stakes, beautifully cut by the tool of the silversmith. If the spectator were looking at the belt, as it would stand upon its edge upon a table, the first plate would show the figure of the British lion quietly sitting upon all fours, or couchant, as the heralds would say. The second plate represents the men at what is called "the scratch," or standing with their fists up in fighting attitude opposite to each other. The third plate has the word "Championship" in large capital letters. The fourth has the armorial shield of Great Britain. The fifth plate is a blank shield, on which the vicissitudes and fortunes of the belt are to be ultimately engraved when its final possessor wins it. Plate six represents a boxer standing "in position," as if before an opponent; whilst the seventh and last contains "the union hands," or four hands joined cross-ways in the centre of a fine star. The whole of the work is splendidly cut out of the solid silver, and nothing can be finer than the workmanship. The belt is laid at full length in a red morocco, velvet-lined case, which is again enclosed in one of strong trunk leather. The value of the prize is about 100 guineas.

In official circles it is related that the Irish recruits for the Pope will pass through the Tyrol on their way to Venice and Ancona.

THE REPEAL OF THE PAPER DUTY.—DEPUTATION TO THE EARL OF DERBY.

On Saturday, at 12 o'clock, a deputation, appointed at a meeting held at St. Martin's Hall, waited upon the Earl of Derby, at his house in St. James'-square, for the purpose of laying before his lordship an address on the subject of the paper duties, and his intention to oppose the bill in the House of Lords on this (Monday) evening.

Amongst the gentlemen who formed the deputation were Mr. W. Ewart, M.P.; Mr. Crawford, M.P.; Mr. H. Ingram, M.P.; Mr. Routledge, Mr. A. H. Dymond, Mr. S. Lucas, Mr. Bradbury, Mr. Evans, Mr. Serjeant Parry, Mr. James Beal, Mr. Chambers (of Edinburgh), and Mr. W. Wilks.

The Earl of Derby, on entering the room, said he had agreed to comply with the request that he should receive a deputation from the meeting held a few days since; for many of the statements which appeared to have been made at the meeting were founded upon a misapprehension which he thought it might be in his power to remove by personal communication. At the same time he did not expect so large a meeting, and, as his time was limited, they must excuse him for saying that in any observations they might make they must confine themselves to the motion of which Lord Montesgle had given notice, and not to the paper duties as a source of taxation. It was quite impossible that he could enter into any discussion of that kind. The question at issue, he apprehended, was simply the effect of Lord Montesgle's motion in a constitutional and financial point of view. On these two questions he would like to hear any observations.

Mr. W. Ewart, M.P., said he thought the duty might be well considered in a commercial point of view.

Mr. Serjeant Parry read the following address:—

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE EARL OF DERBY, K.G., &c., &c., &c.

MY LORD,—The position which you hold as a Peer of Parliament, as a Privy Counsellor of her Majesty, often entrusted by her with high office, and as a former member of the Commons House of Parliament, invests with weight any motion which you may make in the House of Lords. We therefore venture to lay before you some considerations on the notice that you have given to oppose the bill sent up by the House of Commons for the repeal of the Excise tax on paper.

The paper duty was reported against so long as 1835, by a Royal Commission, of which Sir Henry Parnell was chairman.

In 1858, the House of Commons, with the consent of Mr. Disraeli, who was then, in conjunction with your lordship, the responsible guardian of the public revenue, resolved—"That it is the opinion of this House that the maintenance of the Excise on paper as a permanent source of revenue would be impolitic."

On the 11th February, 1859, your lordship, in reply to a deputation that had the honour of waiting on you, said—"I have never concealed my opinion with regard to the objectionable character of the tax. That the impost is objectionable in principle and in practice is what I have expressed before and express again."

On the 1st of March, in the present year, the Board of Inland Revenue reported—"That the paper duty is rapidly becoming untenable."

The Crown, through its responsible advisers, has surrendered the tax. The Commons have provided for the consequent, though we believe only temporary, loss of revenue by other taxes, which have since received the consent of the House of Lords, and have passed a bill for the formal repeal of the Excise tax on paper.

The right of the Commons to be taxed only by themselves is one so long uncontested, that it was with astonishment that we heard that your lordship, acting in a contrary sense, had given notice of your intention to resist the passing of the bill. When, moreover, we read your lordship's speech on the subject, we felt not only astonishment, but alarm, not to say dismay, at a course contrary to established principle, not justified by any precedent, and accompanied by a process of reasoning which we are entirely unable to comprehend. You are reported to have said that to alter a single detail of the Customs Bill would be a violation of the privileges of the House of Commons. But what is the altering of a duty on foreign imports (a matter of public policy), compared with a re-imposition of a tax of a million of money which your lordship, in common with almost every other statesman, has declared to be "objectionable in principle and in practice"?

It has never yet been asserted that the people can be taxed except through their representatives, and it is not competent for the House of Commons to raise money that is not demanded by the Crown. There is no real difference between refusing to repeal a tax and imposing one. Nor is the matter altered by the loose practice which has lately grown up of voting taxes for an indefinite term. These can only be considered as part of the ways and means for defraying the expenditure of the current year, and must cease with the consent of the grantors.

We respectfully submit that to take advantage of a legal technicality for the purpose of introducing a new practice, such as is now proposed, would be contrary to the established character of the House of Lords, as a conservator of the ancient usages of the country—an act of usurpation of the privileges of the House of Commons and the rights of the people—an act wanting in respect to the Crown.

Every usurpation by one branch of the State upon another has, in this country, borne the most bitter fruits.

We therefore earnestly entreat your lordship to reconsider the proposal you have made, and to carefully examine the precedents which bear upon the subject. We can scarcely doubt that such consideration will induce you to refrain from a proceeding so fraught with danger, and which, if successful, would amount to a subversion of the ancient constitution of England and of the legitimate functions of every order of the State.

Serjeant Parry said he had been requested simply to state that the question was one of constitutional practice. It could not be denied that the House of Lords could refuse to agree to any money bill, and among them this bill for the repeal of the paper duty, but no such act had been done by the House of Lords since the revolution. He was perfectly aware that the last attempt made, in 1790, and which was merely to alter some rating for a building for Warwick Jail, was indignantly resisted by the House of Commons, considering that it was an interference with their privileges. He might also call attention to what took place a short time ago in the House of Lords. Lord Wensleydale was made a life peer, but he was refused admission, not because it was doubted that the Crown had a right to create such a peer, but because it was considered that it was contrary to the practice and usages of the constitution. If the House of Lords rejected this bill it would stand alone, and he could assure the noble earl that if he attempted it he would be seriously opposed by those who had always supported him on other occasions. There were gentlemen present in that room who represented the publishing trade, the manufacture of paper, and a large number who, like himself, felt a deep interest in the question. On the faith of the bill having been passed by the House of Commons, an immense amount of capital had been invested in the business, and this would be rendered useless if the House of Lords rejected the bill.

Mr. Ewart reminded the noble lord that he and Mr. Ingram and Mr. Crauford did not come there in their Parliamentary capacity, but merely to represent the question at issue in its commercial aspects. The gentlemen present had entered into contracts for large amounts of paper, to be delivered on the 14th of August next, when it was understood that the bill should come into force. They had also entered into contracts for additional machinery and the extension of premises. All this would be absolutely thrown away if the bill were rejected.

Similar arguments were urged at great length by Alderman Toune, from Oxford; Mr. Petter, Mr. Evans, Mr. Rogers, the Mayor of Birmingham, and Mr. Hargreaves.

The Earl of Derby said the deputation must excuse him if he spoke only of this measure financially, and not with regard to the commercial and political considerations which were involved. He was aware of the great disadvantage it must be to trade that upon a subject of this kind there should be prolonged uncertainty, which must necessarily entail a great loss of capital. He could not, however, argue on the abstract of the merits of the paper duty. He might, however, say that he had received from different quarters very different representations from those which had now been made to him, both from newspaper proprietors and publishers. He had had three petitions entrusted to him from three proprietors and editors of newspapers in Ireland, praying that the House of Lords would insist upon the rejection of the bill, and expressing their satisfaction that so large an amount of money could be raised annually for aiding the finances of the country in so easy a manner. In 1853 or 1859 he stated his opinion that if this tax could be repealed without endangering the finances of this country he would not object to it. It had been said that the tax pressed with undue weight. It was generally found that when such was the case it gradually fell, but during the last twenty years—namely, from 1840 to 1860, the amount of duty on paper had more than doubled. The duty in 1840 was £300,000, while last year it amounted to £1,258,000. When he made use of the remark that he was not unwilling that the paper duty should be repealed, if it could be done consistently with the state of the finances, it had been suggested that the income tax should be lowered, and that the war duty on tea and sugar should be reduced. He considered that the reduction of those imposts was calculated to be of much more importance than the repeal of the paper duties, and he declined, therefore, to take off those duties now, at the expense of an increased income tax and the continuance, his fears indefinitely, of the war duties on tea and sugar. He considered that, under all circumstances, the House of Lords would be justified in taking the step now proposed. He did not know what the constitutional functions of the House of Lords ought to be if they could not be thus exercised; and he did not agree that it was an anomaly in the constitutional history of the country, as had been remarked by a gentleman at the late meeting. He had had 36 years of experience in Parliament, 22 in the House of Lords and 16 in the House of Commons, and he must have misemployed his time very much if he had not gained some knowledge as to the relations of one branch of Parliament to the other. If the House of Lords was not competent to deal with a credit question like this, he did know why the House of Commons should send up such bills at all. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, in making his statement, said that according to his calculations he estimated that he should have a surplus of £460,000. That was a small surplus, even if the Chancellor of the Exchequer's calculations should prove to be correct. This, however, he (Lord Derby) might say that he would not support the motion for the rejection of the bill in the House of Lords if it could not be conclusively shown from the Chancellor's own calculations that he would have no surplus, and that in 1861 or 1862 he would have a deficiency approaching, if it did not exceed, two millions, even with the present high rate of income tax, and the continuance of the war duties on tea and sugar. They should be very cautious how, in the present state of our national affairs, and in the state of affairs on the Continent, they abandoned so large an amount of revenue without knowing how they were to replace it. In this point of view he thought the House of Lords would be justified in passing the resolution of which Lord Montesgle had given notice. He was glad that it had been brought forward by that noble lord, because if the (Lord Derby) had given notice of it, it might be looked upon as having a party character. It had been brought forward without any concert with him, but as soon as it was made he thought it his duty to say that he should support it on the grounds he had mentioned. Nobody doubted that the House of Commons must originate taxes to be imposed. If the House of Commons levied a tax for two years the House of Lords would not have the power, to alter it, making it only applicable to one year. The way the House of Commons acted when such interference was made was to refuse to proceed further with such a bill, and thus the law remained unaltered. The House of Lords, by the course now proposed, would not be usurping the privileges of the House of Commons, and so far from there not having been precedents, he could show that there had been several since 1800, and not a word of dissatisfaction had been expressed by the House of Commons or the country. He believed that in rejecting this bill in the present state of the finances the House of Lords would not be doing an act of injustice to the House of Commons, or endangering the well-being of the country. But that, on the contrary, by the adoption of the course it was proposed to take, it would be conferring a signal blessing on the country. He regretted that he could not agree with the members of the deputation, and he had now endeavoured to state honestly the nature of the course he intended to take. (Cheers.)

Serjeant Parry thanked the noble earl for his courtesy, and regretted that they were not of one mind in the matter.

Mr. Lucas, having offered some remarks, proposed to argue the question "logically" with the noble lord. His lordship, however, respectfully declined.

The deputation then withdrew.

INTERVIEW OF LORD COWLEY WITH THE FRENCH EMPEROR.

THE EMPEROR DEMANDS ANOTHER ACCESSION OF TERRITORY.

The sustained attention with which the movements of Garibaldi have been followed by the English public must not be mistaken for the passing interest which any bold adventurer may excite. An instinctive presentiment has guided the popular mind to the belief that wide convulsions, leading possibly to immense disaster, may result to the European Commonwealth from the intestine commotion of one of Foreign Intelligence.

FRANCE.

PARIS, Friday Evening.

I was not far out in looking to Malta for the quickest and surest intelligence respecting the national uprising in Sicily, and as the large British interests invested and involved in Marsala fully justify constant intercourse of war steamers between that settlement and Valetta harbour, true reports cannot fail. I cannot too emphatically insist on a vital element in this cause, the universal adhesion of clergy, parochial as well as monastic: every clerical establishment or convent is a safe rallying point and depot for arms and supplies. The padres have melted down the leaden pipes of church organs to make bullets; as to the novices of seminarists, these youngsters have all exchanged their levitical gowns for the red tunic of Garibaldi, and carry firelocks. When Cardinal Falconieri died at Ravenna a month ago the Romagnola and city authorities buried their Archbishop with all respect for him as such; Bologna is sure to do likewise in the case of Cardinal Viale Prela, recognising the archiepiscopal character, though firmly repudiating the proconsul.

The head-quarters of the insurrection from its first outbreak was Montereale, a Benedictine monastery, not far inland from Palermo, and commanding from its lofty eminence the whole sweep of the bay. Like its sister establishment, Monte Casino, on a spur of Appenine, it is fortified, and holds a valuable library, as well as Byzantine Basilica, in the style (but larger) than St. Mark's Cathedral. The large Benedictine structure at Messina was the stronghold of the revolt in 1848, when the fathers were shot and dispersed by the Swiss.

The reports in London about a guerilla troop passing the Ombria into the Abruzzi are disbelieved here. There is no possible line of country to allow of such a traverse movement on south side of Appenine, or along the basin of the Tiber. Lamoriciere has broken up his camp at Gubbio, in the mountain pass, and has massed his forces at Perugia. He had issued an address to the citizens there, holding out hopes of reform; but a telegram quickly reached from Rome, administering a rap on the knuckles for outstepping his credentials, no such heretical vision being acceptable at that Court. He has, however, exercised full authority in his own department, and cashiered Antony Smidt, as well as Kalbermatten.—Globe Correspondent.

A point of law of great importance, touching the relations of debtor and creditor between Englishmen in France, was decided a few days since by the Third Chamber of the Imperial Court, presided over by M. Perrot de Chezelles. Mr. Shorthose, an English chemist established in Paris, claiming to be the creditor of a well-known sporting baronet for the sum of 30,000f., and finding that the rules of French law, which remit foreigners to the tribunals of their own country, placed insuperable difficulties in the way of getting his money, obtained letters of domiciliation in France, which carry with them the "enjoyment of civil rights." Armed with these letters, he fancied that he was entitled to exercise a French citizen's privilege of arresting his debtor (being a foreigner) on mesne process. Accordingly, early one morning the baronet was pulled out of bed by a posse of recors (the French term for sheriff's officers), and had he not found the money in the course of the day he would have been consigned to Clichy. But the Imperial Court, on appeal, declared the arrest to be illegal, on the ground that Frenchmen alone, and not domiciled foreigners, are entitled to arrest debtors under the special provisions of the law of 1833. An action for false imprisonment is pending.

THE LANDING OF GARIBALDI.

The following account of Garibaldi's landing at Marsala, and of the subsequent events in the island, is given in a letter from Naples of May 13:—

Garibaldi made his appearance before Marsala with his two steamers, showing the Piedmontese colours, about four o'clock in the afternoon, on the 11th, after having been observed, from an early hour in the morning, tacking between the Punta di Sorello and Cape Ferro, in the neighbourhood of Mazzara. No ship of the Neapolitan marine was in view. It appeared that Garibaldi was expecting some signal of intelligence from the coast. At four o'clock the Lombardo began to put the men on shore, with six pieces of field artillery. Half an hour afterwards the Piemonte put in likewise, and, at the same time, two English steamers, which afterwards turned out to be the Intrepid and the Argus, were seen approaching. Garibaldi now hastened the disembarkation, and Bixio, who commanded the Piemonte, did the same. While this was still proceeding, three Neapolitan war steamers were seen cautiously approaching. The Lombardo immediately showed the Piedmontese colours again, and turning round, sailed right on against the Neapolitan war steamers, as if she wanted to attack them. The Neapolitan men-of-war now evidently retarded their advance. In the meantime the disembarkation of the men and material on board the Piemonte had likewise been completed, and the whole expedition was on shore in admirable order. It was now six o'clock in the evening. The three Neapolitan war steamers then—and only then—commenced an exchange of signals with the English men-of-war, spectators of the scene. At seven o'clock the Neapolitan squadron opened fire upon those soldiers of the expedition who were still in view from the roadstead, keeping guard over the material of war, and upon the town itself. The Lombardo and Piemonte—the engineers and stokers only remaining on board, who, of course, offered no resistance—were taken by the Neapolitans. Garibaldi must either have had no time to sink them himself, or perhaps he let them purposely fall into the hands of the Neapolitans. During the evening the town of Marsala was illuminated, and bonfires were observed on the tops of the mountains. On the same night, or, to speak more correctly, at three o'clock next morning, the whole expeditionary corps started for Alcamo, couriers having been despatched the previous evening to Corleone Castelvetrano, Salemi, and Montalto, for the purpose of inviting the various insurgent bands holding these places to meet Garibaldi at Alcamo. The bombardment by the Neapolitan steamers did not last long; one of them soon set sail in the direction of Girgente, and the two others returned to Palermo. General Salzano has now called back the flying columns, Letizia and Cataldo, from the environs of Ocfalu to Palermo, where, it seems, the royal troops are to be concentrated. A great panic is said to have seized upon the Neapolitan soldiery. Among the officers the councils are divided; there is no doubt that a large part of them are inclined to pass over at once to the Italian cause. It is not likely that the troops will any longer be of much service. Similar news of the demoralisation of the army is coming in from Messina, where the garrison has evacuated the city and withdrawn into the citadel. There is no doubt that an outbreak has taken place somewhere in Calabria, even before Garibaldi's arrival in Sicily had become known. For quelling it, not less than altogether 6,000 men have already, in divisions, been shipped over from Messina. The Basilicate, on the Gulf of Taranto, and chiefly the Citra principate, along the coast, north of the Calabrian peninsula, are likewise in an unsettled state, and some companies of foreign rifles have been sent there. The 14th and 15th of the Line, in which regiments the volunteers from Sicily are enrolled, have shown symptoms of insubordination, in their garrison places, Gaeta and Capua. The 3d of the Line has left Gaeta for Reggio (in Calabria), it is said, but perhaps for Portici, where the Royal family, surrounded by 15,000 soldiers, have taken up their abode. All valuables have been brought there from the Royal Palace. The Ettore Feramosca has left the military port this morning, bound for Palermo. Prince Castelcicala, the King's lieutenant at Palermo, is expected to-morrow by the Marie Christine. You can believe me that the excitement which prevails here at Naples is enormous. It is impossible to foresee what may happen in the next twenty-four hours, and therefore it is quite superfluous to enter into details.

A correspondent, writing from Genoa, May 15th, says:—

Everything here smells of powder. Troops are arriving almost every hour of the day, and are hastily forwarded towards the boundaries of the Roman States. These military movements are explained in a thousand ways. Some say that Austria, having signed a treaty of offensive and defensive alliance with Naples and Rome, is preparing to attack Piedmont; others believe that General Lamoriciere is on the eve of crossing the frontier. These rumours may or may not be well founded, but a general opinion prevails that war cannot be any longer delayed. The Stock Exchange of this city seems to share this opinion, for funds have to-day fallen considerably. I cannot, however, believe that the French commander of the Papal forces—or, as the Italians call him, Monsigner Lamoriciere—will be foolish enough to cross the Tavolle or to attack Arezzo just at this moment. The morale of the Papal army is anything but reassuring, and I hear that a most dangerous spirit of insubordination is noticeable in its ranks. The actual forces which General Lamoriciere can dispose of at this moment are about 15,700 regular troops, thus quartered. In the town of Urbino, 1,000; at Gubbio, 1,500; 2,000 at Perugia; 2,500 at Pesaro; at Fossombrone, 500; Ancona, 3,000; 1,500 at Macerata; 600 at Fano; and 300 at Sinigaglia. At Spoleto, Terni, and other towns of Umbria, about 3,000. More than half of these troops past for the day of battle that they may lay down their arms or turn them against their present commander. Of artillery, I hear he has only three field batteries, and of cavalry scarcely a thousand Bavarians who can be relied on. With such an army, the former republican general will not do much against the Italian national troops; to say nothing of the revolution which would undoubtedly break out through the whole of the Papal States.

GARIBALDI AND VICTOR EMMANUEL.

The following letter was written by Garibaldi to Victor Emmanuel before he started on his expedition:—

"Sire—The cry of help which reaches me from Sicily has found my heart, the heart of some hundreds of my old soldiers. I have not advised the insurrectionary movement of our Sicilian brethren, but as they have risen in the name of the Italian unity, pronounced to that of your Majesty, against the most disgraceful tyranny of our age, I did not hesitate to take the lead of the expedition. I hope that I am going to embark in a dangerous undertaking; but I trust in God, and in the courage and devotion of my companions. Our war-cry will always be "Long live the unity of Italy!" "Long live Victor Emmanuel, its first and bravest soldier!" Should we fall in the attempt, we have undertaken, I trust Italy and liberal Europe will not forget that it has been determined by the most sanctified sentiments of patriotism. Should we succeed, I shall be proud to adore the crown of your Majesty with a new, and perhaps its brightest jewel, on the sole condition that you will prevent your advisers from handing it over to foreigners, as has been done with my native country. I have not communicated my project to your Majesty, for I feared the great devotion I feel for you would have succeeded in persuading me to abandon it.—Your Majesty's most affectionate subject,

"G. GARIBALDI."

We read in a letter from Genoa:—"Although the Italians are nearly mad with excitement, I very much doubt whether a second expedition will be allowed to sail from these shores. To say nothing of the responsibility in which such an occurrence would involve the Sardinian Government, the difficulties in the way of a second expedition are very great. A second Garibaldi is not to be easily found, and there is reason to believe that the Neapolitan cruisers will not be caught in the same trap a second time. All that can be done is to collect money, and to this object the National Committee has earnestly applied itself. The liberal sympathies of the English and Americans who are passing through Genoa have been appealed to."

TURKEY.

A letter received from Serajewo, dated the 8th inst., contains the following particulars:—"The Turkish Government has concentrated large masses of troops on the frontiers of Servia. These troops form 11 brigades, and they extend along the Servian frontier from the river Sava to Bulgaria. A double chain of advanced posts encircles the boundaries. The principal force is concentrated at Vichegrad, where the general staff and the artillery are stationed, and are guarded by some thousand Bashi-Bazouks, who are the terror of the Christians, on whom their chief, Ziam Soultanowich, inflicts the most horrible tortures. The number of these troops, including those who occupy the Herzegovine, exceeds 40,000. 36 pieces of cannon have been placed in battery on the banks of the Drina, and the cavalry is cantoned round the Pashalik of Zworinski, where Arish Pasha, well known at Smyrna as the implacable enemy of the Christians, commands with the rank of kaimakan. He fully maintains that reputation in this country. The chief command of the entire army is confided to Dervich Pasha, who possesses the entire confidence of the fanatical beys and agas. He inspected the Novi-Bazar, Vichegrad, and the entire line of the Drina, and he then demanded reinforcements from Albania and the Herzegovine. There is an army of reserve in these provinces and in Roumelia of 36,000 troops of the Nizam, besides numerous Bashi-Bazouks. These hordes of barbarians have not received any pay for the last three months, and they live by plundering the Christian population. A great number of Servian peasants, from Leznitza, who arrived here to purchase timber, have been arrested and fettered; and, when their landlord came to demand the cause of this brutal treatment, he was served in the same manner. The Turks murdered a Christian, named Iva Miketich, at Touzla, and when his fellow-Christians complained to the kaimakan, who was perfectly well acquainted with the assassins, he gave an evasive answer, knowing perfectly well that they dared not name them, or they would themselves be murdered. Another complaint made after the murder of a Christian named Boza-Trinetch, killed by a Turk, produced a similar result. A Turk cut the throat of a Christian in the village of Machetch, because he saw a gold coin in his possession; and two Turks murdered a young female at Palanka, after having ill-used her. Two Pandours took a child and used it as a target to shoot at. This revolting conduct is sure to produce reprisals on the part of the Christians. You see that, notwithstanding the humane disposition of the Sultan, notwithstanding all the houmayouns, tanzimats, and hatti-scherifs, the position of the Christians is not improved. On the contrary, the yoke is becoming more oppressive and intolerable. Two Austrian merchants were ill-treated in the town of Touzla by the soldiers. The Austrian consul demanded satisfaction, and, not being able to obtain any, he has struck his flag. It is thus that the Turks conduct themselves even towards Austria, who, though sick herself, has used every effort to defend her neighbour, who is falling into decay. In a word, we are now suffering more iniquity than ever we did."

The private letters from Palermo reach to the 11th instant. Every one was in doubt regarding the prospects of the insurrection, but an opinion prevailed that if 3,000 or 4,000 trained men could effect a landing, the Government troops would be worsted. Otherwise it was feared the people would ultimately be compelled to give in. The troops and police had just fired on the inhabitants, although the latter were unarmed.—The "Times" City Article.

A letter from Marseilles states that several corn and flour merchants of that city have received considerable orders from Naples, but that in the present serious state of affairs they hesitate to furnish the supplies demanded.

The accounts from Naples report the King as panic-stricken, seeking to avenge himself, not on his evil counsellors, but on those who gave him wise counsel. The Count of Syracuse, who had warned him of his impending fate, is placed under the surveillance of the police. All persons who attempt to visit him are seized and thrown into prison. The Prince lately visited the monastery of Monte Vergina, where he was hospitably entertained by the monks. Three of them, the Padri Normandia, Fraga, and Ligneri, on the following morning were exiled to Ventotine.

The Limoges Courier says that Glandier, the farm-house where Madame Lafarge is said to have dabbled in poison, is about to become a Carthusian monastery; the inmates intend distilling from simples a cordail known as liqueri des Chartreux.

Police Intelligence.

HEAD-OFFICE—SATURDAY.

Bridget Doherty was charged by Catherine Lahill with assaulting her. Complainant stated that the prisoner went up to her in Bride-street, and without any provocation whatever called her a "Swaddling Souper," and then struck her.—The prisoner was ordered to find bail, or be imprisoned for one month.

Michael Byrne was charged with assaulting Patrick Comyns, a letter-carrier, in the hall of his house, No. 26, James'-street. Complainant stated that the defendant struck him in the face and blackened his eye, for no reason whatever that he could assign.—He was fined one shilling, with one pound costs.

Daniel Keegan, Edward Millar, and Edward Boyle were charged with careless driving, whereby they knocked down an old woman and broke her leg in three places. The parties stated in defence that they called out to the old woman, and used every effort in their power not to injure her, but she appeared to be stupid, or unable to get out of the way.—They were remanded.

A boy, named James Nelson, was charged by Mr. William Warren with stealing a book from him.—The prisoner pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to fourteen days' imprisonment, then to be sent to a Reformatory for four years.

CAPEL-STREET—SATURDAY.

Ellen Brooks was brought up by Police constable 24 C, charged by Thomas Byrne, an assistant in Mr. Nowlan's pawn-office, Pembroke-quay, with the unlawful possession of a valuable silver watch. The prisoner gave several accounts as to how she came by it; first, that she got it from her husband, a soldier at Aldershott; secondly, that she got it from a friend; and, thirdly, from an acquaintance. The prisoner was remanded. The watch was made by Law and Son's, and appears to be of considerable value.

William Henry Geary was summoned at the suit of Margaret Maguire, for the sum of £1 19s 11d for the maintaining, nursing, the caring of the defendant's four illegitimate children, from the 11th November, 1859, to 11th February, 1860. Complainant stated that she was the mother, and the defendant the father of the children in question; that she had lived with him for several years, and supported herself by keeping lodgings, and as best she could; the defendant, however, left her and her children, and took the furniture away, and told her to leave the children at her brother's house; she finally went to his brother's house, and begged him to give her some of the furniture and a few shillings a-week, and that she would get along, but he said he would not give her a broomstick, and that he knew nothing about his brother's children, two of the children had since died, and one of them upon a bit of straw, she went to a burial society to claim £1 to which she was entitled, but, while in the society-room, the defendant entered it, and told the parties there not to give her the money, as he was entitled to it, but they refused to give it to them. The defendant, being examined by his attorney, Mr. James Fitzgerald, stated that he never hired the complainant in any way, and never promised to pay her for the maintenance of her children; the value of the furniture taken away was £25 or £30; witness, when summoned by complainant for 15s. in the Lord Mayor's Court, lodged £5 there as security in the appeal case; the case for maintenance of these children was tried before the Recorder, and he (defendant) was examined in it, when it was dismissed; witness admitted having lived with complainant, but denied positively that he ever promised to provide for the children, or that he ever told her to bring them to his brother's house.

The Magistrate (Mr. O'Donnell) said the case was disgraceful, and one of the most heartless that had ever come before him, and that he was coerced, most reluctantly, to dismiss it.

THE WEATHER

(FROM THE DAILY GAZETTE.)

The weather continues favourable, and vegetation progresses rapidly, so that the present aspect of everything affords the hope of a rich and abundant harvest. We have observed in some parts of the country the potatoes already high above the surface; whilst the other growing crops present a most luxuriant aspect. Hay in our markets on Thursday realised a further advance, and sold at from 5s. to 7s. per cwt.

(FROM OUR GORMANSTON WATCHMAN.)

The weather during the week has been all that could be desired, mild and with occasional refreshing showers. Yesterday we had some heavy rain, but not more than needful, for the land, after the recent drying, was much parched, and the crops, particularly the grass, required rain. The fields now appear in a most promising condition. The several crops are growing beautifully, and not a single complaint of any character reaches our ears.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH—SATURDAY.

(Before Mr. Justice Hayes and a Special Jury.)

The Queen, at the relation of Ashmore Lyle, Esq., v. John Gustavus Crosbie, an alleged lunatic.

At the sitting of the court the hearing of this case was resumed.

Mr. Harris, Q.C., addressed the jury on the part of Captain Crosbie. He commenced by impressing on the jury the importance of the case to his client, and the responsible character of the duty which was cast upon him as his counsel. The whole of Captain Crosbie's career had been laid before them by the friends and associates of his early youth and whatever age had been produced before them; and they had also heard, from his own lips, the explanation of his conduct. Upon their verdict depended the future welfare and happiness of his client. He asked them, in the name of reason, in the name of justice, and in the name of the oath they had taken, to give the evidence a close and dispassionate consideration. He had experience of many civil and criminal trials, but rarely, if ever, had he seen so much acerbity and so much energy displayed as in the present case. Mr. Armstrong opened the case as one which was to be conducted with temperance and with kindness—as one in which the simple truth alone was to be presented to them. But he would fearlessly ask them had it been conducted with temperance—had it been conducted with kindness? and, above all, had the simple truth alone been presented to them, either in the statement or in the evidence adduced to support it? The commencement of Captain Crosbie's insanity was represented to be a sudden change in the affection which he entertained for his wife, and a total change in his manners and habits. It was stated that in 1859 Mr. Crosbie suddenly, and without cause, commenced writing a number of letters to different parties upon a transaction which had occurred in 1858, and which, at the time, he took no notice of. What, however, was the fact as established in evidence? That the writing of these letters was caused by the revival of the scandalous rumours which had been circulated in 1858, and by the receipt, he had good reason to believe, of anonymous letters from the person whom he had suspected of being the original author of them. The simple truth on this part of the case was of the utmost importance, because the questions put to the medical men were based upon the assumption that Captain Crosbie had suddenly, and without reason, conjured up in his imagination a state of facts which never had any existence, or had, at least, been entirely forgotten. It had been demonstrated by the evidence that he was perfectly justified in writing those letters, though perhaps the style in which they were couched might be censurable. There was not a single witness produced by the Crown to disprove the allegations upon which Captain Crosbie justified his conduct; nor did they produce a single witness to prove that the facts stated by the treasurer to have taken place in connection with the Kerry election were the creations of a disordered mind. It had also been stated that Captain Crosbie went about the country, armed with pistols and revolvers, and a bowie knife, to the dread of the inhabitants in the locality; but not a single witness had been produced to prove this statement; and as for the bowie knife, which recalled to one's mind, Kentucky and the backwoods of America, it turned out to have been a simple sailor's knife, which Captain Crosbie was in the habit of carrying about his farm, to prune shrubs and trees. To prove the dreadful character of this man, it was stated he had fired at his groom; but the best proof that he did not do so was the presence of the groom himself on the table, who facetiously told them that if Captain Crosbie had fired at him, he would have been laid a corpse on the grass. The scene at Lord Avonmore's had been shamefully exaggerated—the only portion of it that was true being the visit to that nobleman's house by Captain Crosbie. It was proved that at Lord Avonmore's he had asked the loan of two pounds from the Rev. Mr. Sayers, who was a total stranger to him, to contest the Kerry election, and that being refused, he borrowed 2s. 6d. from the butler for the same object. The fact was, that the Rev. Mr. Sayers was an old friend of his, and while it was true, relying on the intimacy which had existed between them, he asked him for £2 to pay his railway fare to Kerry, it was a distortion of the truth to say that he was foolish enough to ask it for the purpose of contesting the election. Captain Crosbie had run short of money; the election was coming on; and his whole object in asking the money from the Rev. Mr. Sayers was to get down to Kerry, where he could procure money for the purpose of carrying on the election. He did ask the money from the butler, but it was for the purpose of paying for a car from Lord Avonmore's to the Kingstown Railway. There was not the slightest foundation for the statements made, but the superstructure raised upon them was a mass of invention and distortion of facts. Captain Crosbie could not be said to be under a delusion as to the Kerry election, for to constitute an insane delusion, according to Lord Campbell, the party must believe in a fact which has really no existence. It was argued that Mr. Crosbie could not be considered sane because that, previous to his being sent to the asylum, and up to the present moment, he was under the impression that there was a conspiracy against him, at the bottom of which was Col. Herbert; but they should bear in mind the definition given by Lord Campbell of an insane delusion, and applying that definition to the facts as they had been established in evidence—Mr. Crosbie's meeting Colonel Herbert at the railway station; the indifference with which he had been treated by him, when he spoke to him about the incarceration of four of his men; the sheriff refusing to take cognisance of his nomination; and the nomination being held an hour earlier than he had been led to believe it would be held—could they, in the face of such a concatenation of circumstances, pronounce Captain Crosbie—who was all his life at sea, and ignorant of the mode in which such things were carried on—a lunatic, because he believed Colonel Herbert was a conspirator against him? Mr. Harris, in an able argument, dealt with the other facts of the case, and concluded by saying that he hoped he had done his duty to the satisfaction of his client. He was powerless to imitate, although he was well able to admire, the eloquent peroration with which Mr. Sullivan had concluded his address. He called on them in glowing terms to restore Mr. Crosbie to that wife from whom he had been temporarily estranged; and he (Mr. Harris) in forcible but sincere language called on them to restore him to liberty and reason, and by their verdict divorce him from association with moping madmen, howling maniacs, and drivelling idiots.

There were loud murmurs of approbation when the learned gentleman resumed his seat, but they were suppressed by the court.

Mr. Clarke, Q.C., replied on behalf of the Crown. He said that it was a mistake to suppose that this was a proceeding against Mr. Crosbie; but, on the contrary, it was a proceeding for the benefit of Mr. Crosbie, because the question they had to determine was whether he was a gentleman of sane healthy mind, or of insane mind. There was no doubt he was a gentleman of powerful intellect, and that he belonged to a family of the highest respectability. It was equally true that he had been a man of the most quiet, gentlemanly conduct; that he had lived with his wife for seven years on the most affectionate and loving terms; but, unfortunately for him, the admission of these facts only proved the case stronger against him. Mr. Sullivan, in his dazzling imagination, had drawn a picture, in which he represented this gentleman as waiting in breathless anxiety for the verdict which was to restore him to liberty, or consign him for ever to madhouse. This was simply an effort of the imagination, for, as Dr. Nugent had told him, the very moment he could conscientiously do so, he would procure his enlargement. It was the duty of the Lord Chancellor not to detain him one hour under restraint after he had been satisfied on medical authority, that he was restored to his reason. It was also insinuated that he had been treated badly at Dr. Gregory's, but the simple and conclusive answer to that was, that portion of Dr. Nugent's evidence in which he stated that when he saw Mr. Crosbie last his mental condition had considerably improved. Counsel then proceeded to comment upon the pamphlet, entitled "The Proof of the Pudding as in the Eating of it, by an Old Salt." He characterised it as the production of a man not in his sane sense, but, if they came to the conclusion that it was a rational production, Mr. Crosbie deserved the contempt and execration of every man of feeling. He (the learned counsel) did not appear before them as the advocate of Mr. Crosbie's persecution; he was the advocate of his protection; he wanted to save him from being plundered; he wanted to save him, perhaps, from a dungeon for life. That the unfortunate delusion of a conspiracy being against him, from the ticket-taker on the railway to the last man who had taken part in any conceivable way in opposition to him, still existed there could be no doubt; and he warned them against undertaking the awful responsibility of sending such a man upon the world, when a few months' peace and quiet, more proper medical treatment, would, in Dr. Nugent's opinion, have the effect of restoring him to a sound and healthy state of mind.

At this stage of the learned gentleman's address, it being near five o'clock, the court adjourned to this morning, when Mr. Clarke will resume.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER—YESTERDAY.

SITTINGS AT NISI PRIUS.

(Before the Right Hon. the Lord Chief Baron and a Special Jury.)

Brennan v. Williams and Ward.

This case was resumed.

Mr. Lovings, defendants' counsel, addressed the jury in a speech of much ability.

Mr. J. E. Walsh, Q.C., followed on behalf of the plaintiff.

The Lord Chief Baron then proceeded to charge the jury. He said the present was one of those cases that, from time to time arose, upon which the observation might be made that fact was often stranger than fiction. The circumstances had come before the court upon more than one occasion, and it was certainly one of the most extraordinary inquiries that he had ever tried. The action was for trespass, and false imprisonment. It was not a case of malicious prosecution, for, in that instance, it would be required to be proved that there did not exist any probable cause, and that there was actual malice. Here, the action being for trespass, it was a matter of perfect indifference whether there was, or was not, malice in the transaction, for such a consideration did not in the slightest affect the right to recover by the plaintiff, providing his proceedings were instituted within the six months required by the act of Parliament, and if Mr. Brennan was arrested by Williams and Ward, on the 7th of April, he was entitled to damages against them, no matter whether they did or did not intend feloniously to perform their duty as constables, because the arrest was unjustifiable in point of law. There had not been any plea of justification set up by the defendants. Upon the first issue it would be the duty of the jury to find that the arrest did take place, if they were of opinion that both the defendants concurred. In respect to this the defence was that they (Williams and Ward) had acted in the discharge of their duty as constables, and that the arrest took place more than six months before the action was commenced. The defendants alleged that they were within the protection of the act of Parliament, and one of the questions which he (the learned judge) would submit to the jury for consideration was whether the defendants did make the arrest bona fide believing that they acted within their authority as constables, and with a reasonable ground for that belief. The finding upon that would enable the court to determine whether or not the defendants were within the act of Parliament; for the question of law still remained—whether they were within it since they had not acted in accordance to any warrant of a magistrate. The general rule of law had been truly stated by the defendants' counsel, Mr. Lovings, in his very able address—namely, that a private person, where a felony had been committed, might arrest, provided there were reasonable grounds for believing that the person was guilty of a felony, and that a constable might arrest on a reasonable grounds of suspicion that the party was guilty of a felony, even although a felony had not been committed by him. If the jury should find a verdict for the plaintiff at all, they should tell the court whether or not they believed that both the defendants concurred in the wrongs charged. The learned Chief Baron then proceeded to read portions of the evidence referring to the particular days when the arrest and imprisonment were charged to have taken place.

At half-past three o'clock, a member of the jury intimated that they had made up their minds, and they did not see any necessity for his lordship's reading further evidence. Such as they had heard from the court they knew the full value of, but the rest was perfectly clear to them.

The Chief Baron said he thought the case of so complicated a character as to require his laying the matters upon which controversy existed before them.

A Juror said he did not think that anything further could possibly alter the opinion they had come to.

The Chief Baron did not think he would be doing justice between the parties if he omitted to lay before the jury the points on which the different witnesses were directly at issue in testimony. His lordship then resumed the reading of the evidence.

At six o'clock the jury retired, and in less than ten minutes returned into court, with a verdict for the plaintiff, with damages £250, and costs. On the first issue they found that both defendants did cause the plaintiff to be arrested and imprisoned; and on the second—"whether the defence was true in substance and in fact?"—they answered, "It was not."

Chief Baron—Gentlemen, upon the question I put to you, as to whether you believe there were reasonable grounds for believing that the plaintiff should be arrested, how do you reply?

A Juror (Mr. Gatchell)—We think, my lord, there were not reasonable grounds. We are of opinion there were not any whatever.

Another Juror—The jury believe that Mr. Brennan was not at all implicated in the transaction, and we don't think the defendants had any grounds at all for acting as they did.

Another Juror (Mr. Haly)—We think that they not only had no grounds for believing the plaintiff should be arrested, but that they did not entertain the belief. The whole proceedings were of a most unjustifiable description.

Another Juror—It is the unanimous opinion of the jury that neither Mr. Brennan nor his wife broke down in the least in any one particle of their evidence through the whole case.

This concluded the proceedings.

CONSOLIDATED CHAMBER—SATURDAY.

Mr. Justice O'Brien sat in the Nisi Prius Court at 12 o'clock, to dispose of motions for three Law Courts.

Pointon v. the Chester and Holyhead Railway Company.

Mr. T. A. Purcell stated that in this case his lordship had, on a previous day, granted the terms of a motion to substitute service of the writ of summons and plaint. The plaintiff had not since acted upon that order, owing to a miscalculation as to the time when the trial would be had. Counsel now asked for a change of venue, which was granted.

Wilson v. Donohoe.

This was a custody motion. Mr. O'Brien applied to the court that the flat issued by the Common Pleas, and under which his client (the defendant) was arrested and imprisoned, might be set aside. It appears that on the 7th of April last past, the plaintiff came before the court, and made an affidavit, in which he set forth, amongst other things, that he had called on the defendant and demanded payment of the sum of money in dispute between them (£101 8s. 3d. for goods sold and delivered); that the defendant then and there stated his inability to meet the debt, and his intention to leave the country; and further he (plaintiff) in his affidavit expressed his belief that the defendant was about proceeding to America. Upon this affidavit the flat for defendant's arrest was issued. Counsel now submitted that under the section of the statute (the Mean Processes Execution Act), this affidavit was insufficient for the object it sought and attained. By the act it was required that probable cause should be shown to prove that the party would leave the country, and according to Mr. Ferguson's book, it was requisite that the affidavit should express the belief of the party swearing it, that the defendant was about to quit Ireland, unless he were arrested; and, if this be omitted, such affidavit was defective, and the order should be discharged. Counsel cited the case of "Bateman v. Dumfries," 7th Dowling's Practice cases, in which Chief Justice Tindall, in delivering judgment, had said that the affidavit should not only show the belief, but even go further, and set forth the facts upon which such belief was grounded.

Judge O'Brien inquired when this gentleman had been arrested.

Mr. O'Brien said on the 21st April.

Judge O'Brien—And we are now in the 19th May!

Mr. O'Brien said that as much haste had been made in the proceedings as was possible. The affidavit filed by the defendant stated that on the occasion of plaintiff's visit to his (defendant's) house, part of the accounts were investigated by them, and the plaintiff on leaving promised to return and resume such examination; that, instead of so doing, he, on the 21st of April, caused the defendant to be arrested and confined in the jail of Waterford; that it was not true he had signified his intention of leaving Ireland, and that in no way had the plaintiff reason to believe he (defendant) was going to quit the country.

Judge O'Brien—Does he now state whether he so intends?

Mr. O'Brien said he did not, nor was he bound to do so.

Judge O'Brien said he did not dispute that, but he did not think the defendant had made sufficiently clear a case to have the application granted.

Cody v. Thomas Conolly, M.P.

Mr. Walker applied for an order to plead several defences. The action was brought on an alleged special agreement, and counsel sought, in addition to other defences, to plead the statute of frauds. The plaintiff is a tenant on the defendant's property, and alleges the breach of the agreement in question.

The Court granted the motion.

Smyly v. Kelly.

Mr. James Coffey, on behalf of the defendant, applied in this case—the parties in which are the same as in the action recently tried before the Lord Chief Baron—for liberty to plead double matter. The declaration contained two counts, the first of which alleged breach of contract in not having built a certain house, and the second set forth the breaches. Counsel sought to plead that the work done was in accordance with the plans and specifications furnished, and that such work and the materials were not of the objectionable character described in the declaration.

The motion was allowed.

Jeremiah Hartnell v. John Orell Lever.

Mr. Curtis moved the court on behalf of the plaintiff for an order to substitute service of the writ of summons and plaint. Counsel relied on the affidavit of the plaintiff, which set forth that on the 14th of May he caused the summons and plaint to be issued against the defendant, as the owner of the steamship Indian Empire, claiming damages for the non-fulfilment of his contract, in failing to supply him (plaintiff) and his family, as passengers on their voyage from New York to Galway, with sufficient food, &c.; and, also, in not affording proper surgical assistance to him on the event of an accident with which he met. The summons and plaint also complained that the plaintiff had not been carried directly on his voyage (as stipulated for), but was stopped at Newhaven and delayed. It appears that the defendant resides at Eglinton-square, in Middlesex, which is out of the jurisdiction of the court, but that John Macnamara Cantwell was his attorney some time in January last, and acted as such agent for the defendant in a cause in the Exchequer Court; that in that cause the writ of summons and plaint had been served upon him for the defendant, who thereby received it, and counsel submitted that similar service in the present case would be sufficient for the purpose required.

Judge O'Brien said it was not sufficient that it should be proved an attorney had acted in two other causes to establish his continued agency in behalf of the same party. The question was whether a gentleman who acted as solicitor for the defendant in actions entirely distinct from the present be enough to constitute him a general agent.

Mr. Yeo (officer of the court) said it was necessary to show the existence of a general agency.

Judge O'Brien, under the circumstances, could not hold that a sufficient reason had been given for supposing the continued agency of Mr. Cantwell. If it had been sworn that he was a general solicitor for the company, the matter would be very different. The motion should be refused.

TEETH,

BY HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

Newly-invented application of Vulcanised Gum-coloured India Rubber in the construction of Artificial Teeth, Gums, and Palates.—Mr. W. BEALE, Dentist to the Nobility and gentry of the late Duke Egar, continues to supply the Loss of Teeth by the aid of this new, original, and invaluable invention, consisting in the adaptation, with the most absolute perfection and success, of Vulcanised India Rubber as a substitute or base for the ordinary Gold or Bone Frame. The extraordinary advantages to be derived by the present system may be briefly noted in a few of their leading features—all cumbersome edges are avoided, a greatly increased freedom of action is supplied, and a fit perfected with the most unerring accuracy; while, from the flexibility of the agent employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose, or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums. The acids of the mouth cannot act upon the Vulcanised Indian Rubber, and as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may be retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell or taste being at the same time wholly provided against. A single Artificial Tooth, from 5s.; a complete Set, with Gold Springs, from £3 3s.; 6 gratuity Decayed Teeth, with Enamel Cement, 5s.—W. BEALE, Dentist to the Public, 16, SUFFOLK-STREET (One Door from Grafton-street), Dublin. At Home from Nine to Six. Mr. W. Egar particularly cautions the Public against any advertisement appearing in his deceased brother's name.
